Roman soldiers, Huguenot silkweavers, Jamaican airmen, Bangladeshi sailors and a whole host of other people from around the world have helped to shape its history and its future. B: "London is a city that has been going for so long that multiculturalism has become a habit," said Georgina Young, a senior curator of contemporary history at the Museum of London. "There are communities here from pretty much everywhere in the world. [ ] C: The best way to learn about London is to get out and experience it by talking to people, said Young, who spends a lot of time doing just that in her job.

Partnership
for Young
London

Connect Develop Influence Our Partnership

25% of 100% its
Future

25% of the London, 100% its future is led by young people, and takes an asset based approach to young people's futures, and solutions to some of the challenges that young Londoners face. Information is gathered through a series of surveys designed and delivered by young people, which informs and contributes to round tables with key regional policy makers.

The report provides a snapshot of young people (who represent 24.9% of the population of London) experiencing a wide range of services in a sample of London boroughs. This shorter 'think piece' is being published as a contribution to the much wider debate that is starting to emerge across all sectors working with children & young people about how we can – collectively and thoughtfully – develop and crucially deliver a positive future vision for young Londoners.
